Background

According to the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI), 21% of adults experienced mental illness in 2020, and 16.5% of youth aged six to seventeen experienced a behavioral health disorder in 2016.² Millions of individuals of all ages are affected by mental illness each year. The following statistics are listed on the NAMI website to demonstrate the impact of mental illness in the United States of America: 1 in 5 U.S. adults experience mental illness each year, 1 in 6 U.S. youth aged 6 to 17 years old experience a mental health disorder each year, 50% of all lifetime mental illness begins by age 14 and 75% by the age 24 and suicide is the second leading cause of death among individuals aged 1 to 14.² The ripple effects of mental illness include increased risk of developing cardiovascular and metabolic disorders, increased dropout rates for high school students, and increased tendency to repeat a grade for students aged 6 to 17 years of age.²

Documentation often serves as the primary method of contact between practitioners to achieve continuity of care.³ The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) cautions “records not properly documented with all relevant and important facts can prevent the next practitioner from furnishing sufficient services”.³ Unclear and inconsistent documentation can lead to unintended complications and gaps in care as well as denial of claims.³
